A "GOOSEY" CASE

WAS HEARD BY A JURY IN JUSTICE PEACOCK'S COURT.

JUSTIFIABLE "CUSSING"

The Jury was of the Opinion that "Miss" Annie Acted Very Unwisely in Using Sarcasm Shortly After "Mister" Johnson had Been "Goosed" and Were of the Opinion that Johnson Was Justified in "Cussing" Her.

Charley Johnson, the negro porter at the Hawk saloon is "goosy." Webster does not give a definition of the word, but it means when a man who is "goosy" is suddenly tickled he is liable to do most anything. He will strike objects nearest to him, jump through windows and do most everything that is unreasonable. The fact that Charley Johnson is "goosy" caused him to appear in Justice Peacock's court yesterday afternoon, but his "goosiness" saved him from punishment for "cussing" a colored damsel. It was the first "goosy" defense that has appeared here in court, and the case required a jury which was composed of the following gentlemen: Fred Roth, F. M. Jump, James Forstad, L. R. Miller, Jim Reeves and Jack Porter.

There was a full array of legal talent on both sides. Baker & Smith represented the defense and Prosecuting Attorney Hervey appeared for the prosecution.

It seems that someone "goosed" Johnson in a saloon a few nights ago, and he became suddenly wild and jumped through the window of the Hawk saloon. "Miss" Annie Cross, a maiden of color, was on the outside and laughed at the colored gentleman for being "goosed" and said she was glad of it. "Mister" Johnson could not stand this sarcasm and he used vile language and "cussed" her. He did not use any violence, and the "cussing" was the cause of his arrest. The jury carefully considered the case and decided that the "cussing" was justifiable as "Mister" Johnson had been "goosed" only a few minutes before and his state of mind would cause him to do most anything. The jury was of the opinion that a jail sentence would be beneficial to both "Miss" Annie and "Mister" Johnson, but the fact that "Mister" Johnson was "goosed" saved them from duress vile in the present case, and it was simply a case of justifiable "cussing," as "Miss" Annie had used sarcasm shortly after the "goosing" of "Mister" Johnson.
